Police: 7-Year-Veteran Attempted To Meet 13-Year-Old At Gas Station

HAWTHORNE -- A fired sheriff's deputy has avoided a possible four-year prison term, and pleaded no contest to using the Internet to arrange for sex with a person he believed was a child, the Daily Breeze reported Saturday. - Of course he avoided a prison term, he's a cop... The average citizen would be in prison.

Joseph Mican Abadla Carlos, 41, must also register as a sex offender for the rest of his life. In exchange for his plea, prosecutors will drop a charge of attempted lewd act upon a child under the age of 14.

Carlos was a Carson station deputy sheriff when he was caught in a sting aimed at alleged online predators last year. Deputy District Attorney Christina Buckley told the Daily Breeze that Carlos went to a Hawthorne gas station to meet a girl he believed was 13, but who was actually a detective posing as a very-young girl.

He was arrested March 31, and charged late last year, the Daily Breeze reported.

He pleaded no contest to a count of using the Internet to meet a minor for lewd purposes and is expected to be sentenced to 90 days in a city jail when he returns May 5 to Los Angeles Superior Court. Carlos is not expected to be jailed for additional time, having already served 30 days in jail.

Carlos, a seven-year veteran, was fired after his arrest, which was part of a sting operation conducted by the South Bay Internet Enforcement Task Force.

Defense attorney Vicki I. Podberesky said her client had been destroyed by the conviction. "He's lost his job. His wife left him. He's losing his house," she said.
