Christopher Bowersox (<http://search.bakersfieldnow.com/default.aspx?>

ct=r&q=%22Bowersox%22&type=20198.90000081) and attorney David Torres were granted permission to dissolve their relationship during a hearing Monday in federal court.

"There exists a mutual conflict of interest in my representation of Mr. Bowersox," Torres wrote in a court motion, according to the prosecutor's office. "Said conflict is irreparable and we have reached irreconcilable differences."

Bowersox was arrested in February 2010, accused of possessing and distributing child pornography. The FBI case against him alleges he had child pornography images on his home computer and took part in online chats in which he discussed raping, mutilating and killing young boys.

With the change of legal representation, the March 6 trial date for Bowersox was vacated. A new date will be set sometime after he either hires a new attorney or is appointed a new attorney.
