A Baltimore city police officer has been arrested by Anne Arundel County police in what authorities say was a domestic dispute with a woman.

Anne Arundel County police say the woman told police that 42-year-old Wayne Adams assaulted her in a Pasadena home after an argument on Monday afternoon. The victim told police the incident happened after an argument. She told police several hours later, she again became involved in an argument with Adams and that it ultimately ended with Adams spitting on her and physically removing her from the bathroom. The victim told officers that she feared for her safety.

Adams was arrested and charged with second-degree assault and fourth-degree sex offense, and has been released on bond.

No attorney is listed for him in online court records.

Baltimore City police said Adams, who is assigned to the Operational Intelligence Section, is currently suspended with pay.
